Nuhjala Manor, Vehmaa, Southwest Finland

Nuhjala Manor's main building is one of the best preserved rococo houses in Finland. It has been built in 1764 by baron Claes Lybecker

King Gustav III of Sweden and Tsar Alexander I have also stayed in the Manor and their bedroom can be visited during the guided tour.

Today Nuhjala Manor is owned by Merja Ylismäki-Nerjanto, who inherited it from her parents. She and her family are growing wheat, barley and oil plants on the estate. Tourism is also an important product line nowadays. Picture has been taken in the King's room

Nuhjala Manor's specialty, medieval feasts are held in the original 14th century cellar vaults.

Nuhjala offers genuine medieval meals, made by following the same recipes and ingredients as in medieval times.

All servants has medieval clothes.

Extra clothes are also available for customers, who wishes to have medieval dressing during the dinner.

There are hundreds of candles, which is the only light there in the cellar vaults and the background music is silent medieval music. Genuine experience.

Nuhjala Manor offers traditional meals, made by local raw materials, in authentic 19th century bakery house, with candle lit tables and on open fireplace adding the final touch to the unique atmosphere.
